

CLERGY RESIDENCE DEDUCTION

- You have to complete this form to claim the clergy residence deduction. You complete Part A and Part C, and your employer completes Part B. If you have more than one employer in the year, each employer has to complete a separate Part B. In this situation, you must complete only one Part C calculation by combining the income from all eligible employers.

Note 1: "Income from qualifying employment" has the same meaning as "remuneration for the year from the office or employment" as stated in paragraph 8(1)(c) of the Income Tax Act. Do not include any CPP or QPP disability benefits received on line 1.

Note 2: Where both the spouses or common-law partners are clergy members, each person should record the full amount of rent paid or the fair rental value on this line.

Note 3: The actual rent and eligible utilities paid, or if the residence is owned, the fair rental value including eligible utilities, must be reduced by all amounts, other than the employee's clergy residence deduction, that is claimed by you or any other person, (as explained in Note 4) in respect of the same accommodation, if the other amounts deducted are for the same months or period. This could arise, for example, when your spouse or common-law partner claims work-space-in-the-home expenses.

Note 4: If both spouses or common-law partners are claiming clergy residence deductions, the person with the higher salary should complete the calculation first, showing "0" on this line, provided there are no other deductions for accommodations other than clergy residence. The person with the lower salary should then take into consideration the deduction with respect to the clergy residence, made by the person with the higher salary, and also include any other deduction for the same accommodation (as explained in Note 3).

(C) If you received free accommodation for your residence (A) for part of the year and owned or rented the residence being claimed (B) for a different part of the year, add amounts (A) and (B) and claim the total amount on line 231 of your return. The amount claimed for the clergy residence deduction can never exceed income from qualifying employment on Line 1 of the above calculation.
